

The Williams Institute

Advancing critical thought in the field of sexual orientation law and public policy.

The Williams Institute is the nation's leading research center on sexual orientation law and public policy. The reports of our researchers — including demographers, economists, social scientists, and legal scholars — inform judicial and legislative decisions in the areas of employment discrimination, marriage equality, adoption and parenting, immigration and military policy. We have trained over 2,000 judges on sexual orientation law, and our fellowship program has placed young scholars in academic positions throughout the country. Additionally, our work has appeared in every major newspaper, including The New York Times, Los Angeles Times and USA Today — injecting sound research into the current debate on LGBT issues.

You are cordially invited to the

Williams Institute Spring Reception

Join the Williams Institute for cocktails, hors d'oeuvres, an educational update on LGBT Rights and a performance by the Gay Men's Chorus of Washington's Potomac Fever!
