UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA at LOS ANGELES School of Law opened for its first class in 1949. Since that class' graduation in 1952, more than 2200 other attorneys have been trained at UCLA. The law school's young but proud tradition has been possible because of its graduates' magnificent contributions to their profession and the high quality of performance always required by the law School.

1970's CHALLENGES TO THE UNIVERSITY

The university enters the decade of the 1970's in its most precarious position ever. The university's students no longer believe in the university's relevance to their present lives and future aspirations. Heretofore this was a question never raised by the majority of students attending the university.

Today, the university community is being forced by students to grapple with issues raised by events from without the university rather than issues raised by events from within the university.

The difficult problems of poverty, hunger and racial discrimination in all of American life are but a few of the problems students are now insisting the university address itself to immediately.

Law '70 in its following pages will focus upon some of the problems faced by the university.

Law 1970 is published by the UCLA Law School Student Body at Los Angeles, California. Wallace Walker, Editor, Copyright 1970.

Women in the Law

One of the problems law schools must deal with in the 1970s is their seeming historic bias against the training of women for the practice of law. Year after year women have been the most discriminated against minority at law schools.

For the past several years, UCLA has attacked this problem by making it clear to all prospective applicants that sex will be absolutely no criterion for admission.

As a result, the female population at UCLA now approaches 100, one of the largest number and percentages of any law school's population in the country.

The women on these two pages is the best proof known to demonstrate the desirability of having beautiful and academically qualified women pursue the study of law.

All of the lovely ladies gracing pages four and five of LAW 70 are full-time law students at UCLA. And they are but eight of almost 100.

Learning the Law Occurs in Many Places

Mural Depicts Struggle

UCLA Law Students are reminded each time they enter the library of the awesome social responsibilities awaiting them when they become attorneys.

This reminder is a work of art donated to the Law School by its painter, Douglas Riseborough. The mural stretches 50-feet in length and is nine-feet high.

The work depicts the tensions, anguish and contradictory messages made by both the established order and those people in contemporary society demanding change.

Painter Donates Mural

The mural was donated to the Law School by its painter, Douglas Riseborough, on September 23, 1969.

Dean Murray Schwartz accepted the work in behalf of the law school in a public unveiling held in the library.

The unique gift was painted especially for the Law School.

ADMINISTRATORS

At the beginning of the 1969-70 academic year, three new administrators assumed positions at the Law School. The group included Dean Murray Schwartz, Associate Dean John Bauman and Assistant Dean Martin Kahn.

Dean Schwartz replaced now Professor of Law Richard Maxwell. Mr. Schwartz joined the UCLA Law faculty in 1958. Prior to that, he earned his law degree at the University of Pennsylvania and clerked two years for United States Supreme Court Justice Fred Vinson.

Associate Dean Bauman replaced now Professor of Law Robert L. Jordan. Mr. Bauman, a long-time member of the faculty, earned his SJD degree at Columbia University.

Assistant Dean Kahn came to UCLA after working two years for the United States Commission on Civil Rights in Washington D.C. He earned his law degree at the University of Virginia. Mr. Kahn replaced Anthony McDermott, now a member of the law faculty at the University of Denver.

The only returning member of last year's administrative team was Roger Cossack. Mr. Cossack earned his law degree at UCLA.

These administrators are charged with the continued development and growth of one of America's finest law schools.

Student Organizations

Student organization is the foundation of a law school's growth. Much of the UCLA Law School's growth over the past decade is directly attributable to students like Jeff Kupers, active in Moot Court and the Community Participation Center, who spend time insuring, through active and involved participation, the continued viability of law student organizations.

Students working on the UCLA Law Review are charged with publishing the most scholarly journal edited by the Law School. The Review appears quarterly and only prints articles of meritorious academic quality.

This year's Review was headed by Rick Stone, a member of the class of 1970. Membership to this publication is invitational.

Alaska Law Review

Last year, a new Law Review was formed at the Law School to meet the needs of a state without a single law school. The Alaska Law Review is published for the Alaska Bar and is restricted to scholarly articles relevant to Alaskan law.

Cruger Bright, James Birmingham, Allen Fleishman, James Kendricks, Paul Bell, Jonathan Kotler, Wallace Walker.

The Docket is the student newspaper of the Law School. The publication appeared monthly throughout the school year.

The 1969-70 staff included Wallace Walker as editor, Paul Bell, associate editor, Jim Birmingham, managing editor, and Jonathan Kotler, sports editor.

Allen Fleishman, Tony Alperin and Cruegar Bright served as reporters. James Kendricks was the business manager.

Community

The Community Participation Center was started as a student-initiated effort to provide clinical experience for law students. Physically, it's an office on the second floor of the law school. In reality, it's socially concerned people organized to channel their concern. The Center began with Peter Douglas and, after his graduation last June, was bequeathed to Ron Matonak and Barbara Williams, who, last summer, hustled enough funding to keep the Center in operation and throughout the year handled its administration. The Center functions as an umbrella organization to coordinate and provide support service for a number of programs designed to bring legal and quasi-legal service to people to whom such service has previously been unavailable.

CPC programs are varied, but they do reflect current law student interests. Some emphasize involvement with the poverty community; others are concerned with the university. Some could be called social action; others, simply a different approach to legal education. Some offer credit; most just provide experience.

The Center's operation represents wholly-independent student effort. Each program is staffed and run by law students who try to deal constructively with the legal problems confronting people ostracized by the mainstream of American society -- the poor, students, political dissidents.

Draft Counseling

The UCLA Law School Draft Counseling office operates for the purpose of counseling young draft age men in matters pertaining to Selective Service.

Law Students work in the center on a voluntary basis and in addition devote many hours of their spare time to assisting attorneys engaged in selective law litigation.

Third year law student Mark Levin is shown above counseling a student while Steve Gilbert, also a third year student, discusses a counselee's problem over the telephone.

Indian and Chicano Law Students Association

Primarily for the purposes of representation on the student organizational level and service as a coordinating agency for student projects and activities, the UCLA Mexican-American and Indians Law Students Association was formed last year (1968-69).

This year, however, (1969-70) The Indian Law Students Association was formed so that its members could more directly work with the Indian-American Community.

The group has already sponsored and coordinated a national meeting of Indian Law students. Second year student Leland Pond is not pictured.

The Mexican-American Law Students Association has continued to grow since its inception and under the leadership of Lupe Martinez has greatly broadened its thrust this year.

The group's most ambitious project thus far is its La Casa Legal office which is located in the Chicano community in East Los Angeles. The office is staffed by attorneys and local law students and provides counseling and legal assistance in the areas of welfare, landlord-tenant and other traditional problems of the poor.

INDIAN LAW STUDENTS ASSOCIATION: Rod Lewis, Gerald Leroy Brown.

Speakers Forum

First year law student Joyce Sheavitz and her fellow workers are charged by the Student Bar Association with the responsibility of contacting and inviting outside speakers to come to the law school and speak to its student body.

Miss Sheavitz's group has completed Legal Forums which featured Deputy District Attorney Lynn Compton and participants in the Chicago Seven trial of this spring.

Speakers appear without charge and the law school does not schedule classes at 12 noon on Thursdays so that these assemblies may be held.

THE DEAN'S COUNSEL, 1970

The activities of a modern law school require financial support beyond that which is available through University sources even in normal budget years. One essential source of support for the UCLA Law School comes from those alumni of the School who become members of Dean's Counsel upon pledging a contribution of $100 per year to the Dean's Fund. This Fund is used for a wide variety of purposes -- including support of programs like Moot Court Honors, and enrichment of others.

Dean Murray L. Schwartz has said, "The Law School is deeply indebted to those of its alumni who have committed themselves to this tangible support. Without the ability to support those activities assisted by the Dean's Fund, the present standing of the UCLA Law School would be severely diminished. We are truly dependent upon the members of Dean's Counsel."
